- 1. At the end of February 1951, an unknown number of officials of several Bulgarian Government departments in Sofia were only given 2,000 leva of their normal monthly salary which ranges from 8,000 leva per month upwards. When the officials affected inquired the reason for this withholding of salary, they were informed that the money was not available but that they would receive the balance of their pay in a matter of days.
- 2. Eventually, after considerable delay, another small payment was made to the employees concerned, who were then informed that the remainder of their February salary would not be paid until the end of March.
